

Truthfulness and Process

Truthfulness reflects a human being's visceral feelings or emotions, and I find Yusuke Asai's art exhibit show so much truth due to the process of making his art. His exhibit is a very improvised piece of art, and because it's improvised and because the artist expresses, through his art, his primary thoughts and visceral emotions- purity, rawness, and truthfulness are reflected in his art.

I think another huge factor that emphasizes the reflection of truthfulness in Asai's art is the fact that he uses a huge element of nature. (Diverse soil types which correlate with Gandhi's view on diversity in religion and humanity in general.) The literal rawness of the dirt vibes so many organic feelings, and visceral reactions in a human are JUST as organic as diverse soil types.
